It is also useful to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher in maintaining domestic unity, reassuring both those who favor military action and those who see the British battle fleet as only a weapon to coerce conces-

Mrs. Thatcher, pressed on the issue Thursday, said that regardless of world reaction, "we cannot rule out the use of force." Otherwise, she asserted, "negotiations could go on endlessly."

On Wednesday, the question of British military tactics was raised again by Rear Adm. John F. Wood-ward, the commander of the task force. He told Britisb correspondents aboard his flagship, the Hermes, that be intended to set up an air blockade around the islands with the helicopters and planes based on his two carriers, the Hermes and Invincible.

FDP leader Hans-Dietrich Genscher, who is foreign minister, said on television Thursday night that the FDP opposed more state intervention in the economy and regarded the Social Democrats' tax plans as impractical. Democratic and Republican administrations have warned that the United States would respond vig-orously if Israel were unseated. Washington has never spelled out what it would do, but it could cut tion to the UN budget, boycott the assembly or both.

This is one reason why no serious move to expel Israel has occurred in the past. There are no provisions for ousting a UN mem-ber. But South Africa has been barred from sitting in the assembly on the ground that its delegation represents only the white minority in the country.

SEOUL - Authorities freed on Friday eight Christian leaders who were detained after they issued a statement urging the recall of the two top U.S. officials in South Korea.

The Korean Christian Action Organization last weekend demanded the recall of Amhassador Richard Walker and Gen. John Wickham,

The Christian leaders' statement came under fire on grounds it was likely to help the cause of the Communist regime in North Korea and strain relations with the United States. Senior prosecutor Kim Kynng Hae said the decision to free the leaders was made in order to foster

The question whether to admit the Libyan and Soviet-supported Polisario Front, which has been fighting for six years against U.S. backed Morocco for possession of the former Spanish colony of Western Sahara, has caused a split in the OAU.

Polisario was admitted as a full member under the name of the Democratic Arab Republic of the Sahara during February's Council of Ministers meeting in Ethiopia.

The admission triggered a 19-nation walkout, led by Morocco, and several members have vowed to boycott the Libyan summit meeting if the front attends as a fulf member.

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON - The Republican chairman of the Senate Appropriations subcommittee on defense has charged that the Pentagon failed to inform his panel of a olan to send 21,000 more troops to Western Europe and provided no explanation for the increase.

Sen. Ted Stevens of Alaska, who is also the assistant Senate majority leader, told Pentagon officials at a subcommittee hearing on Thurs-day that "since 1975, there has been a slow and steady huildup without informing Congress" of about 58,000 more U.S. troops in Europe, including the 21,000 to be sent this year and next.

It was the second consecutive day that Sen. Stevens and other panel members pounded Pentagon officials with hostile questions about the size and cost of U.S. forces in Western Europe and Japan and with threats to reduce those forces because of a belief that allies are not doing enough in their own defense,

It was also the second day that Pentagon officials did not have information available to answer Sen. Stevens' questions about the troop increases and costs or to straighten ont possible discrepancies in the figures being used by the committee and the Pentagon.

Evasive Answers'

Sen. Mark Andrews, a Republi-can from North Dakota, told Assistent Secretary of Defense Richard N. Perle at the hearing on schators no answers with respect to the 21,000-troop increase. In 17 years of such hearings, the senator claimed, "Tve never seen such eva-

Mr. Pede had sought to assure the panel that there was "no intent to sneak in" more forces and that eventually the Pentagon and the committee staff would get to the bottom of the numbers problem. Nevertheless, the hostility and confusion evident at these hearings occurs at a time when Congress is certain to make cuts in the military budget and when sentiment for bringing hack some U.S. troops, an idea that the Pentagon strongly opposes, seems to be growing in

Sen. Stevens said that Congress had been told to reduce the military budget by $4 billion to $6 bilhon and demanded to know on what basis the Pentagon was asking to increase forces in Europe. Because the Pentagon officials did not seem to know exactly what increases, if any, were being made, they essentially did not answer the question. Stennis Warning

To emphasize the concern in Congress over the NATO costs issue, Sen. John C. Stennis, the Mississippi Democrat who for many years was chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, joined the panel and warned the Pentagon witnesses that Congress wanted and was entitled to a usable estimate of the costs. Mr. Perle had explained that it was difficult and even misleading to try to estimate precisely the costs of the U.S. commitment to NATO, which Sen. Stevens claimed have risen to $133 billion, because those forces could serve elsewhere if necessary, such as in the Gulf. He said that they would cost a lot even if based in the Unit-

The debate over the increases in troop levels centers around the overall increase of 58,000 since 1975, which Sen. Stevens says he learned from Pentagon statistics but which Deputy Secretary of De-fense Frank C. Carlucci disputed in the hearing on Wednesday. The planned increase of 21,000 troops this year and next in addition to the 337,000 troops already in Europe comes from material supplied to a Senate Armed Services manpower subcommittee on Feb. 26 by Undersecretary of Defense Fred C.

Prosecutors indicated at the caring that they had deleted parts of the videotapes to which defense lawyers objected as being "unfairly prejudicial." It was not clear whether these deletions - perhaps including a shot of James A. Brady, then Mr. Reagan's press secre-tary, lying gravely wounded on the ground — had been ordered by Judge Parker.

The mid-South includes the provinces of Ranong, Surat Thani, Phangaga, Nakhon Si Thammarai and Trang. The region is the traditional home base of the southern wing of the Communist Party of Thailand.

The government's costliest, most successful and best publicized campaign this year resulted in the capture of what Gen. Harn calls the southern "nerve center" of the Thai Communists. The attack, against a base known as Camp 508. on Chong Charn mountain, produced most of the govern-

The attack was said to have dispersed the Communists into neighboring mountains and into the more populous lowlands on both sides of the peninsula's spine. Gen. Harn and his aides have been showing visitors captured weapons and supplies. The Communists' arms are mostly old rifles but include Chinese machine guns and American-made M-16 rifles. Most of the weapons, Gen. Harn said, had been obtained in raids on police and army outposts, and not from ahroad.

The government has blamed local Communists for a recent wave of attacks on its troops, the Thai National Railways and Surat Thani's government building.

The most spectacular of those attacks took place on March 19 when about 40 pounds of TNT exploded in a parked truck, shattering the Surat Thani government huilding. It killed 7 persons and wounded more than 50, most of them government employees. Gen. Harn and the provincial governor said separately that the bomhing was a attack upon the plans of each for ridding the region of Communists and criminals.

Uniformed local Communists have been boarding crowded buses and calling village "seminars" to deny complicity in the bombing. Some Thais, bowever, suspect, but without having concrete evidence, that a business rivalry involving corrupt government officials may have been the cause of the blast.

Gen. Harn rejected a request to visit Camp 508, saying his troops there were being relieved and that bands of "three to five" Communists were still hiding in the nearby jungle. "They're waiting for us to leave." Gen. Harn said. "So we don't leave."

Former commanders of the Fourth Army Region tended to at-tack and withdraw, be explained. His own plan is to hold the mountains, build roads through the passes and set up new settlements of farmers and miners, be said. He would not say where his troops would strike next but several firefights have been reported lately from mountainous areas near the peninsula's west coast, in the provinces of Krabi and Phangnga.

On Military Budgeting

One important casualty of the current budget quarrel may be the national consensus supporting a substantial buildup of American military capability. As the prospect of record budget deficits and the painful reality of further cuts in the domestic budget have become widely apparent, public attention has naturally turned to the buildup proposed for defense. There is now the danger that hasty, poorly planned cutbacks will lock in place a pattern of spending that is not consistent with America's main defense needs.

To some extent the administration has invited this result by its dollars-first-plan-later approach to the military budget. President Reagan inherited from his predecessor a commitment to a nulltary buildup of already very substantial proportions — a five-year, 5percent annual increase above inflation. The first hastily prepared Reagan hudget raised that target to 8 percent, adding money for almost every weapon system suggested by the military in recent years. The resulting budget calls for a step-up in weapons buying that many authorities helieve cannot be sustained by industry. Other observers suggest that the choice of what to buy was dictated more by the familiar preferences of the military services than by strategic considerations.

One such questioner is William Kaufmann of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, whose analysis of the military budget has been published by the Brookings Institution. In developing his detailed defense alternative. Kaufmann - a top Pentagon adviser to Republican and Democratic administrations for 20 years - put himself through the sort of exercise that one would hope guides Pentagon planning. He started with an assessment of the likely threats facing the United States and its allies in the next decade, determined the best available combination of weapons and personnel to meet that threat, and added up the costs of producing the needed forces in the next few years.

Kaufmann, of course, for all his expertise, is not a soldier; his plan must necessarily be taken as a relatively abstract work, one that can hardly be expected to foresee or comprehend all the turbulence of relations among nations and governments; and his defense budget is admittedly enormous - more than $1.4 trillion during the next five years. The procurement rate it calls for may be unsustainable. Even so, it would spend almost $130 billion less than the Reagan budget during the same period.

The major contribution of this analysis is not that it can be accepted as the "right" statement of military needs, but rather that it talks about the choices in the right sorts of terms - What is really needed, and bow can it be reasonably bought? This is the debate that Congress should now be having.

Without such bard discussion, it is likely that the choice of what to cut will be left to the Defense Department. If the past is any guide, this could mean that down payments will be made on expensive systems of lower priority rather than long-overdue measures to improve the readiness of current forces. It may also mean that when the full consequences of these decisions become apparent in future years, the reaction will be a return to the start-and-stop pattern of military spending that has disrupted planning and inflated weapons costs in the last decade.

Exit Admiral Inman

Admiral Bobby Inman's explanation for quitting as number-two man at the Central Intelligence Agency is probably as accurate as a top spy's can be in public. He says be wants to run something, start a new career, educate his teen-age sons. If that were all, there would be ample cause to regret the loss of brains, talent and tact from an agency that can never have enough of those assets.

But that is not all for Adm. Inman bas been more than a smart spy. Many congressmen and others who are unsure about the CIA nonethcless trust Bobby Inman. He has been the main hope that, while improving its work, the agency won't backslide into dangerous dirty tricks abroad or snooping on Americans at home. That this military officer should be regarded as the embodiment of brudence and respect for civil liberties demonstrates how sensitive those matters became under the Reagan administration. Adm. Inman is no sentimentalist. His tough-minded management of the National Security Agency won the plaudits of every knowledgeable bawk. But even before be was picked as deputy CIA chief, the administration had begun relaxing the rules against domestic spying. The admiral, without disloyalty, was able to satisfy congressional committees that he understood their concern and would keep them informed. In his short year in office he managed to compensate for some of the weaknesses of an executive order that repealed post-Watergate reforms and had an aura of again "unleashing" the agency. Americans want their foreign agents beld accountable to elected authorities. As could be seen in his few public discussions of intelligence from Central America, Adm. Inman practiced a confidence-inspiring restraint.

If President Reagan wants to maintain the trust thus earned, be now needs a successor of comparable capacity. But this resignation also shows that confidence should not depend on personnel alone. Congress should try, once again, to enact a legislative charter that will make all the intelligence agencies a secure part of America's government of laws. It cannot be a government of men - not even men like Bobby Inman.

Washington Put in the Dock

Mr. Pym's difficult mission to Washington will not be made any easier by the climate of distrust toward the United States which now pervades Britain. This did not start with the Falklands crisis. Last March a poll published in Newsweek found the British were far ahead of the rest of Europe in distrust of the United States. Only 6 percent of Britons bad a great deal of confidence in the ability of the United States to deal wisely with world problems. The results of such a poll would probably be even more disturbing now.

There is a widespread feeling in Britain that the United States administration bas not shown the solidarity which Britain had a right to expect in such a crisis. After years of accusing Europe of weakness in the face of aggressive totalitarianism, suddenly the United States is in the dock for the same crime or rather, the administration is, for public opinion seems strongly in favor of Britain.

1932: Elections in Germany

BERLIN - Five-sixths of the German electorate will be called upon to vote at the Diet elections in the states of Prussia, Bavaria, Württemberg and Anhalt and in the Free City of Hamburg. These elections transcend in importance the recent presidential elections, and they may prove a turning point in the political history of Germany. "April 24 will be our day of vengeance," said Adolf Hitler just after the run-off vote. If his prediction is borne out, the stage is set for a new order of things in Germany. The Hitlentes are believed to have slight chances in Bavaria, Wurttemberg, Anhalt or Hamhurg, but it is certain that they will make triumphant gains in Prussia, the key state of the Reich.

From Yesterday's Rash Words, Today's Crises

WASHINGTON — The cres-cendo of diplomatic crisis now huffeting the Reagan admin-istration — the Middle East, the Falklands. China, the nuclear arms controversy - should help to establish a new rule of diplomacy: In international affairs, words do count after all.

It was words, their use and their misuse that recently belped to explain why Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jt. was flying thousands of miles to prevent war in the South Atlantic, and wby Deputy Secretary of State Walter J. Stoessel Jr. was flying thou-sands of miles to prevent it in the Middle East.

The conventional wisdom about words and diplomacy is that the former can be deployed in any conceivable way in support of the latter. Mentir et dementir (lie and deny), a French statesman once counseled. During the Nixon administration, the president's confidant and newly named attorney general. John Mitchell, urged: "Watch what we do, not what we say." One has heard the same advice after thetorical excesses by the present administration.

But most of the Reagan administration's current difficulties stem from the fact that foreigners have been listening carefully to what senior U.S. officials say. The foreigners have acted or reacted accordingly, with conse-quences that threaten American diplomatic objectives in several parts of the world. In the Middle East, the Reagan administration has been dis-lurbed by violent clashes on the West Bank between extremist Isracli settlers and angry Palestin-ans. But early in the administra-tion, senior officials casually reversed 14 years of U.S. policy under four administrations by declaring that Israeli settlements in the occupied territories were not illegal. The spread of these provocative settlements was thus encouraged by U.S. officials.

These same officials remained silent as extremists in the Israeli government, by stating that the West Bank would remain permanently under fsraeli control, repeatedly contradicted the spirit of Camp David, which recommitted Israel to UN Security Council Resolution 242's formula of Israeli withdrawal in return for

In El Salvador, the Reagan administration was dismayed by the strong electoral showing of the rightist Arena party headed by Roberto D'Aubuisson, whom State Department officials bave described in formal congressional testimony as a "pathological killer," But U.S. criticism of D'Aubuisson ended with Ronald Reagan's electoral victory; key members of the president-elect's transition team even agreed to meet with the Salvadoran extremist. It should be no surprise that D'Aubuisson has now obtained a degree of respectability that previously had been denied him. Further south, the United States was more recently stunned by Argentina's impulsive decision to invade the Falkland Islands. The decision was all the more bumiliating because senior U.S. naval officers were visiting Buenos Aires at the time of the invasion. But the military junta in Buenos Aires must have been encouraged, at least in part, by the ap-proving signals it had recently been receiving from Washington. In the Far East the atmosphere surrounding the administration's decision to supply military spare parts to Taiwan threatens to undermine the major U.S. diplomatic achievement of the 1970s, closer ties to China. Again the problem began with words. During the presidential campaign, candidate Reagan blasted the Carter administration's treatment of Taiwan and promised to upgrade relations with the island if elected. Reagan's campaign excesses inevitably colored subsequent ac-tions that his administration has taken toward Taiwan.

Words also lie behind the rising unease of the American people about the Reagan administration's national security policy. Recently the administration permitted a senior member of the National Security Council staff, Richard Pipes, to state that the prospects of a nuclear war with the Soviet Union are now about

By Charles William Maynes 40 percent. When it is recalled that this same official a few months earlier argued that war with the Soviet Union was inevitable unless it changed its system of government, a mood of unease in the country would seem to be a mark of collective balance in civic responsibility.

The Reagan administration is not the first to misuse words in the beat of political struggle.

John F. Kennedy during his television debates with Richard M. Nixon was provocative and irresponsible in his comments on U.S. Cuban relations: Jimmy Carter in the 1976 election promised to withdraw all U.S. troops from South Korea, something he wisely refused to do while in office. Both men were following the John Mitchell approach to diplomacy.

In light of subsequent cost to the United States, it may be time: to urge national leaders to recognize that the effects of what they: say are often more lasting than the results of the last election Words and diplomacy can be transformed into loose cannons. - or into huilding bricks. But the effect is always consequential. As Russell Davenport wrote some years ago: "Men are destroyed by [words], and others are raised; to power, and others are rallied to a: fighting cause, and wars are do-clared and people are driven from their homes.

That words can affect the lives of ordinary people in such a devastating manner should per-suade public leaders to use them with greater care.

Beyond an Artist's Little Room, Our Words

FY WEST. Fla. - When I last saw him, which was only a year ago, he was in that mischievous mood that I remembered from my student years. He joked even about his fragile bealth and made fun of the slight tremor in his speech. Fifty-nine years ago, when Archibald MacLeish was four years out of Harvard Law School and about to be made a junior partner in Boston's presulgious law firm of Choate, Hall and Stewari, he underwent a crisis known to many men and women as they pass the age of 30. "I was writing, yes, but out of the margins of my life ... lines like a letter from a brief vacation in another country. He had solved the problem of supporting a family while also writing verse, but he felt somehow that he had not solved anything. "If I had, why should I wake at morning with that sense of owing. Owing what? To whom?" He left his State Street office to enter the Park Street subway, then changed his mind and looked up at the icy sky. "It was for me the moon was waiting. I turned back up the subway stair, crossed Tremont Street between the inching cars and headed west across the Common... The Public Garden. Sidewalks empty in the winter wind. The great black elms of Commonwealth before me. I saw the

That night, after talking for long hours with his wife, he made the painful and inevitable decision. "We sailed from Boston to Le: Havre ... found a flat in Paris on the Boulevard St. Michel, four floors up, stairs only and no heat... It was no lark for us,"
Many of those who came to know him only at the high point of his eminence cannot im-agine the sense of danger that he felt and the anxiety he underwent. "We had, literally, bet our lives," be later wrote.

The bardest part, from then on, was wait-ing. Letters to his friends at home attempted to justify what many viewed as an insane decision. Moreover, the quick reward refused to come, "When would those 20 lines be written

By Jonathan Kozol 10 lines even - five?" Even five lines that might somehow begin to justify the choice that he had made. "There wasn't a young writer in that city in those days who hadn't burned his ships in one flame or another.' MacLeish refused to yield to the myths that since have come to cloak the truth about that ineptly named "Lost Generation." It was "not only the Paris of the damp, sweet mornings with their flooded gutters and the high-wheeled carts, but the Paris of the difficult work, the work of art ... The young from Africa and the Scandinavian countries and the other America and Britain and the islands of the sea bad made the great and improbable decision of the young — the impossible begin-ning — and it had led them there."

In the next six decades the former State Street lawyer published 27 volumes of prose, poetry and drama, won most of the literary onors that America has to offer, and left to the world, along with his prize-winning plays and epic poems, perhaps four dozen lyrical and haunting verses that future ages are not likely to allow to die. "Conversations with the moon go on and on." he later wrote, remembers to the property of the later wrote. bering those hours on the Boston Common on a February night in 1923.

MecLeish returned to Boston, not as a law-yer, but in the role of Boylston professor of oratory and rhetoric at Harvard University. Our class met at 3 p.m. on Wednesdays. His office was on the top floor of Widener Library looking down on Harvard Yard. In winter, the sun would already be setting over the rooftops of the college as he sat in his straight-backed chair beside the win-

if dow, profiled by the last light of the golden air about the Charles River.

In my final year at Harvard I was fortunate to be allowed to join that class again. I had hoped to be a doctor but had simultaneously and secretly begun to write a little fiction an an endless number of impassioned and arro-cious poems. I showed MacLeish some of those poems. "Go back to prose." he said.

In subsequent years while living in Paris, I wrote to him often. He responded always with unhesitant support. More recently I wrote to ask about his health, which had been uncertain for a time.
"I am," he replied, "well again and strong."
He said that he had just lost 15 pounds, but that his doctors finally "found I had a heart."
He added: "I had suspected this for years."

Last April we had a warm reunion at his farm in Conway, Mass. He was still strikingly handsome: a man of clear blue eyes and a courageous face, weather-worn now, as if he had been off on a sea journey.

We spoke much of the time about contemporary problems. He was disturbed by American and Soviet intransigence and by the in-creasing danger of a nuclear war. His social conscience was not pretentions but unyield-ing. Unlike his great contemporary, W.H. An-den, he longed to believe that poetry can make something happen in the world beyond an artist's little room of ink-stain and ordeal. The setting sun flooded the music room of the house in Conway as we spoke, but the early onrush of the night did not extinguish his enthusiasm. His last letters were handwritten on small pages of lined yellow paper. Only in the past few months did he send on much bucfer notes, written in a frail script, somewhat diffi-cult to decipher, but signed in his familiar manner: "Faithfully, A. MacLeish."

Jonathan Kozol, who studied with Archibald MacLeish in 1957 and 1958, won the National

Stirrings

Regarding "Crackdown Reflects Soviet Crises" (IHT, April 13); Leopoid Unger suggests that the opposition movement in the Soviet Union is slowly being destroyed. However, his excellent article describes the destruction of the overt human rights groups which form only part of the opposition movement in Russia.

For example, Mr. Unger says that "the arrest and jailing of Vsevold Kuvakin and Alexei Nikitin did away with SMOT, the com-mittee for independent unions." This is simply not the case. SMOT has changed tactics and gone underground, where it continues to produce detailed documentation of labor abuses by the Soviet authorines. In February, the Russian-language political monthly Possev published a summary of several of SMOT's latest monthly docu-ments, the most recent of which was dated September, 1981.

The growth of underground polinical organizations is also noticeable, as the overt dissident groups are suppressed. The Democratic Movement of the Soviet Union and the People's Democratic Union are but two recent examples of such groups. Mr. Unger should not confuse the destruction of visible and overt dissent with the underlying currents of the opposition movement in the Soviet Union.

GEORGE MILLER. Institute for European Defense and Strategic Studies, London.

The Islands

The Soviet Union has made known its view that the Argentine Republic was justified in seizing the Falklands. But what is Russia doing in 1982 sitting on thousands of square miles of territory belonging to Finland and Poland, not to mention Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, once czarist colonies? Still, Russia is right. In decolonizing you have to start somewhere, so why not the Falklands?

JOHN COLEMAN-HOLMES.

Britain should sell the Falklands to Argentina, most of the proceeds then being used to reimburse the islanders for their land and property. Those who wanted to leave could take the money to establish themselves anew, and those who wanted to stay could buy their property back from Argentina. The time gap to the sale transaction day would probably have to be six months — to negotiate the price between Argentina and Britain, and with the islanders. In the meantime, Argentina could withdraw its soldiers and its flag knowing that in six months it would return with clear sovereignty. The flag could go down and up again without loss of face.

Britain would thus extricate herself from a difficult situation. disposing of the sovereignty issue as Russia did when it sold Alaska to the United States. In addition. by providing an adequate means Malaga, Spain.

for the islanders to chose freely be-tween staying and leaving. Britain would establish a precedent that might be acceptable for handling the Gibentanian and handling R. HARGREAVES.

Why not let the British and the Argentines fight it out on the soccer field at the World Cup in Spain, with the television rights going to pay off the islanders? It would be less grotesque than the diplomatic circus now playing. BRYANT HALIDAY

Omerville France. For Britain

James Reston (IHT. April 21) put his finger on it: Argentina should not be allowed to benefit from its use of force. World War II occurred because the Western democracies cravenly tolerated Hit-ler's territorial grabs; Argentina's action is not different in nature but only in scale. If the United States is not prepared to make it clear that crime cannot be allowed to pay, then Britian must. P. FENN. Geneva

Regarding "Britannia Awakened at Sunset" (IHT, April 15): Britain, as a mature nation, has not as yet resorted to brute force but only implied the use of it. The United States has been known to go to far greater expense, cover greater dis-nances and use more brute force at less provocation.

ANDREW TEMPLEMAN. Edinburgh.

Thank God for Haig and Argen-una. For years we in Europe had lived in a fool's paradise, trusting in the United States.

F. GOOD.

If I lived in Hawaii, Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands I would be worried. Fortunately for them, the Falklanders lived under a flag that still bas meaning for its people. JACK DALLES.

Other Views

Regarding "The Falklands Crisis" (IHT, April 5): The two editorials are misinformed. Britain took the islands by force. After millions of words that choked diplomatie channels for more than a century, our patience came to an end. We recovered the Malvinas Islands with the instruction that not a drop of British blood be shed. CARLOS HORACIO BUENO.

After the recent tide of racism and restrictive rules about foreigners in Britain, the present gunboat diolomacy shows another facet of British imperialism. No wonder the ancient European empires support Britain. But people in the Third World are hoping that the superpowers will forget their strife for a while and belp to forestall bloodshed in the South Atlantic.

The SPD Convention: A Wake?

MUNICH - Political conventions have been likened to tribal fertility rites, intended largely to stimulate the adrenal glands of the faithful so they will go out on the hustings to campaign. Thus, in some countries, the customary accoutrements include brass bands, funny bats, paper flags, scantily clad pulchritude and rip-roaring oratory.

Besides the fact that it is regarded as terribly un-German, polities being considered a serious, somber business, there was none of that in Munich for the five-day national conclave of West Germany's Social Democranic Party, just ended. Indeed, if that congress could have been compared with anything, it would be a wake. Granted, the meeting was held in the capital of the political oppo-sition, just a short subway ride from the palace where Franz Josef Strauss, Bavaria's minister-presi-dent and the recently defeated Christian Democratic candidate for chancellor, presides.

In Bayaria the SPD once reigned over a moderately leftish island of liheralism in an ultra-conservative sea, but it has been reduced, thanks to years of intramural ideological warfare, to virtually a sect on Bavaria's political fringe. The Social Democrats might have felt energized to come out of their corner and fight. They didn't.

To be sure, as former Chancellor Willy Brandt, still very much the party's leader and reconfirmed as such with a bigger majority than ever, put it at the outset: No SPD convention in the last 20 years has been watched as closely, at home and abroad, as this one.

Domestic and foreign journalists outnumbered the more than 430 delegates by three-to-one. There were certainly issues on the agenda that merited media attention, notably the attempt by the SPD's left and pacifist wing to pass a plat-form plank that would have vetoed Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's NATO policy of deploying intermediate-range nuclear missiles in Europe next year if the current U.S.-Soviet talks fail in Geneva.

What all the many observers saw and heard, however, with the exception of an afternoon's impassioned debate on defense policy, was not a conclave stirring the party to win elections but one trying By John Dornberg by yet bigger margins.

So much was said, by so many speakers, about the SPD's achieve-ments during the more than 12 years it has governed West Germany in coalition with the Free Democrats that it sounded like a party writing its own epitaph.

The size of the auditorium -Munich's gargantuan, tent-shaped Olympic Hall, built for the 1972 Games — may have contributed to the dirge-like atmosphere and the sense of political as well as organizational disarray. There were the delegates, staffers and press on the floor dwarfed by an arena of thousands of mostly empty seats. A colder, more bostile environment

could not have been chosen. Not Enough

But it was more than the unfriendly locale. It was the party's mournful state and its icy political prospects. Never before, except in the 12 years of Hitler's Third Reich when it was outlawed and its leaders were in concentration camps, has Germany's oldest political party faced a bleaker future.

One heard many glorious words at the convention about the honor that had been preserved in those dark days of Nazi dietatorship, and even more about the party's glorious accomplishments since: victories won on behalf of the common man and to give West Germany renewed respect in the world. But elections are won by telling voters not what was done for them yesterday but what is promised for tomorrow.

Given the state of the world and the economy (now in its longest and worst recession in more than 30 years), the party's internal battles over ideal ways. tles over ideology and the complacency after long years in power, there is little the SPD can offer for tomorrow except more of today.

That is not enough. According to the latest Allensbach and Infratest opinion surveys, embarrassingly made public just as the delegates convened, the SPD is at its lowest. ebb since West Germany's first postwar election in 1949. Both surveys indicated that if an election were held now the SPD would get 30 to 32 percent of the popular vote, the Free Democrais 8 to 10 percent, and the opposition to prevent it from losing even more CDU-CSU a clear majority of 52 percent, with the remainder going to the new pacifist and ecological movement, the "Greens,"

And not only is the SPD losing voters by droves, but for the first time in its history it is being deserted hy its hard core, dues-paying members. Peter Glotz, the party's general manager, reported glumly that more than 32,000 people, or 3.3 percent of the total, turned in membership cards last year. The phenomenon was most ominous in large cities, traditionally SPD power bastions of organized labor. There was once a time in West German politics when "Comrade Trend" dominated headlines and huoyed the spirits of Social Democrats. That was the halcyon era in the 1950s and '60s when the SPD's share of the vote increased a few percentage points from one local, state or national election to the next until it emerged as the counuy's dominant political force. "Comrade Trend" has not been mentioned in more than a decade, but as the SPD is discovering now, he is still around. Only, he is marching the other way — toward the "Greens" who draw most of their support from the dischehanted left, youth and intellectual wings of the SPD.

It was to avert these defections that Willy Brandt embarked nearly two years ago on a policy of "in-tegrating" the party's disparate wings, fringes and constituencies. He is still pursuing that course. He has few alternatives, in hard times when the SPD's bold on power depends on coalition partnership with a party of quite different ide-ological orientation. But the policy obviously is not working.

The question is no longer whether the left-liberal marriage will break up, but when. After almost certain defeat in the Hesse state election in the fall? Or just before the next scheduled general election in 1984, when the end seems certain to come?

What the SPD seemed to be doing in Munich was writing the ohituary to its era of political power. The irony is that it was doing so in a city where the very intramural battles that are destroying the national party reduced the SPD from Munich's governing party to an also-ran.

IN ANSWER TO OUR CALL FOR HELP, AS WORLD TEACHER FOR ALL HUMANITY,

THE CHRIST IS NOW HERE.

HOW WILL WE RECOGNIZE HIM?

Look for a modern man concerned with modern problems—political, economic, and social. Since July, 1977, the Christ has been emerging as a spokesman for a group or community in a well-known modern country. He is not a religious leader, but an educator in the broadest sense of the word—pointing the way out of our present crisis.

We will recognize Him by His extraordinary spiritual potency, the universality of His viewpoint, and His love for all humanity. He comes not to judge, but to aid and inspire.

WHO IS THE CHRIST?

Throughout history, humanity's evolution has been guided by a group of enlightened men, the Masters of Wisdom. They have remained largely in the remote desert and mountain places of earth, working mainly through their disciples who live openly in the world.

This message of the Christ's reappearance has been given primarily by such a disciple trained for his task for over 20 years.

At the center of this "Spiritual Hierarchy" stands the World Teacher, Lord Maitreya, known by Christians as the Christ. And as Christians await the Second Coming, so the Jews await the Messiah, the Buddhists the fifth Buddha, the Moslims the Imam Mahdi, and the Hindus await Krishna. These are all names for one individual.

His presence in the world guarantees there will be no third World War.

WHAT IS HE SAYING?

"My task will be to show you how to live together peacefully as brothers. This is simpler than you imagine, My friends, for it requires only the acceptance of sharing."

"How can you be content with the modes within which you now live: when millions starve and die in squalor; when the rich parade their wealth before the poor; when each man is his neighbor's enemy; when no man trusts his brother?"

"Allow me to show you the way forward into a simpler life where no man lacks; where no two days are alike; where the Joy of Brotherhood manifests through all men."

"Take your brother's need as the measure for your action and solve the problems of the world."

WHEN WILL WE SEE HIM?

He has not as yet declared His true status, and His location is known to only a very few disciples. One of these has announced that soon the Christ will acknowledge His identity and within the next two months will speak to humanity through a worldwide television and radio broadcast. His message will be heard inwardly, telepathically, by all people in their own language.

From that time, with His help, we will build a new world.

WITHOUT SHARING THERE CAN BE NO JUSTICE;
WITHOUT JUSTICE THERE CAN BE NO PEACE;
WITHOUT PEACE THERE CAN BE NO FUTURE.

A CONTROL OF THE PROPERTY OF T

U.S. Fashions: Fresh Faces

by Hebe Dorsey

EW YORK — The fashion pendulum has swung back when a noted Paris designer such as Sonia Rykiel comes to the Perry Ellis collection nere. Rykiel's claim to fame is a pair of knitting needles and Ellis does some pretty inven-tive knits himself. So what about some ideas crossing the Atlantic in the other direction for

That was not the only encouraging sign in the American fall and winter collections, which began this week. Another fascinating change is in the structure of the whole U.S. fashion pyramid. It used to be that Seventh Avenue dominated the scene, its machinery and market so big it could not accommodate individual talent, which invariably got

Now, things have changed. There are not only stars and superstars — such as Bill Blass, Halston, Oscar de la Renta, Calvin Klein, Ellis and Ralph Lauren — but also a whole cast of newcomers, outsiders so to speak, who are sitting on the rim but are ready to explode any minute. Hardly a day goes by without come minnte. Hardly a day goes by without somebody mentioning a oew name, a new talent — very much like Paris.

As in Paris, these younger designers are doing their own thing and working from downtown lofts, far away from the bottom-line-oriented Seventh Avenue. They know that somehow they are going to make it because now there seems to be an appreciation for indi-vidualistic designers, whereas years ago all America did was to copy Paris. Today, New York entrepreneurs understand and invest in

The interesting thing is that the money now comes not only from Seventh Avenue backers but also from art angels.

The most striking example is Julio Espada, known as Julio, who has had his ups and downs and is now back on the scene with the help of art dealer Xavier Fourcade. Julio says Fourcade treats him as he would a De Koon-

Julio, a 26-year-old Puerto Rican, scored his first success at 18 in a small Madison Avenue boutique where he was discovered by Jackie Onassis. His trademark was simple, one-size-fits-all clothes with expensive fabrics and exquisite workmanship.

He built up a clientele of society women and show-business stars such as Lena Horne. By the time he was 20, he was at the head of a multimillion-dollar business, discovered the jet set and nightclubs and promptly lost it all when his partner left him.

He has been back in business for a year and a half and is starting with a different attitude. His new setup is a cheerfully modern fourfloor building, way downtown on Washington Street, where he controls his production. He has 45 accounts, including Saks, Neiman-Marcus and Bloomingdale's and he is beginning to sell in Europe. He is still doing silk and simple shapes, and appeals to well-heeled women with an international style. His prices are high — $500 to $2,500 retail.

Michaele Vollbracht, from Kansas, was originally an illustrator doing ads for Bendel, then Bloomingdale's. He new designs grand entrance clothes for strong personalities such as Paloma Picasso, Diana Ross and Elizabeth Taylor. "Tm not a fashion designer, I'm an artist," he says of himself. "My greatest friend as a child was a coloring book," he adds, as he finishes giant canvases, due the next day, for the lifth August's windows. Saks Fifth Avenue's windows.

He is the enfant terrible of American fashion, with a reckless showiness that does not alway endear him to high and mighty fashion pros. "I have a big mouth," he admits.

His clothes are also difficult. Although he sells to Bergdorf-Goodman and other establis-ment stores, he says, "Lots of people don't like my clothes. They're too much of a statement." Barbara Sinatra wore a quilted bedspread of his as a cape to a recent party. "I costume women," he says. "I don't know how long the party will last but I love it."

His $1.5 million business employs 25 people and he has 4 licensees. His prices, with $3,500 the average for an evening dress, attract rich women from Texas and Los Angeles who, he claims, wear his clothes to entertain at home. But he is starting a lower-priced line backed by Manhattan Industries.

Asked if he felt like an outsider, he says: "Yes, I never did belong. I'm a maverick." Carolina Herrera is another newcomer who has done very well for herself. A society woman from Caracas, Herrera, 42, has a husband, THENS — The spacious office of Greece's Minister of Culture feels crowded these days with slightly anarchic, good-humored bustle. Urgent dossiers are brought in by aides, many of them young and in jeans. The minister is talking on one, sometimes two, of the half-dozen telephones arrayed on her big desk, which is gradually disappearing as the heaps of files grow.

always close at hand. While she talks animatedly, Vico, her makeup man, touches up his handiwork. Waiting to start filming a day in the busy minister's life, a U.S. television crew tries to find room for maneuver among the gifts overflowing onto the floor: books, paintngs, models, puppets, statues left by foreign visitors.

The whole world passes through here," wails a television producer. He has been trying for three days to catch Melina Mercouri alone. (Filmmaker Jules Dassin has been heard complaining: "I'm her husband, and I can't get her

Emerging from behind her desk and snapping her fingers to catch her secretary's attention over the conversations humming around her, the minister complains: "I'm giving a press conference to the world today, but I'm not getting any work done."

The public appearances, despite her complaints, appear to be part of her role as the Socialist government's best-known international ambassador

The 56-year-old politician retains striking traits of the actress who created a memorable image of postwar Greece as the compassionate prostitute in "Never on Sunday." The legs, surprisingly long, the busky voice, the generous mouth and gestures — all survive despite the fatigue that horn-rimmed glasses and the thick makeup cannot entirely banish. On the government bench in parliament, she is a striking figure in blond hair and blue leather skirt with fishnet stockings. The media clamor for her.

She refuses most interview requests, thereby exposing herself to criticism from detractors who accuse her of being temperamental and fearful of tough questions. In fact, she says, she is trying to master. The U.S. television show is partly an attempt to undo some anti-American remarks ("Reagan? His acting was had, and his ideology is worse") she made shortly after Greece's Socialists won office last October.

She also appears eager to correct the impression left hy her emotional demands for other European governments to return artistic treature of the 10th century of the 10th centur sures removed from Greece in the 19th centu-

Lord Avon (son of the late Anthony Eden) sneered in the House of Lords that, even if Britain wanted to return them, the marble reliefs from the Parthenon would not be safe in Athens because its pollutioo rots surviving monuments of antiquity.
"Lord Avon's offer is very nice because our Socialist government is going to clean up the environment, so Britain can safely return our property then," Mercouri replies.

In fact, she retains few illusions about recovering the reliefs from the British Museum. She would settle, she says, "if they would give us back a piece so we could reconstruct the whole Parthenon frieze with a degree of authentici-

In Thailand, the War Is Over in All But Memory 'When the GIs Come Back?' Winnie Asks Some Never Left

by Jim Slack

AKLI, Thailand - Above the entrance of a garden restaurant on the dusty main street of Takli, 200 kilometers north of Bangkok, a sign reads, Winnie's. It is one of only two signs in English (the other is for a barber shop) left in this Thai city of 30,000, the site of a U.S. air base during

The sign, freshly painted each year, beckons any returning Gis. to the warm embrace of Winnie, the efficivescent proprietor of Takh's best restaurant. In earlier days she was also the owner of 52 trim bungalows rented by U.S. officers and civilian contractors.

Business is good at her restaurant, but she misses the convivial GIs. After a 10-year period when the base was opened and closed several times, the Americans left in 1976, turning the buildings and runways over to the Royal That Air Force. With them, the Americans took their F-105 lighters and other aircraft, their light, hearted france and their force. their light-hearted banter and their free-spend-ways.

Winnie has lost her bungalows and an adjacent restaurant — cheated out of them, she insists — and forced to move to a new place down the road. She presides there now, nursing her resentments, nostalgic, and imploring the occasional American visitor, "When the GIs come back?" -

Her brown eyes mist over as she remembers the young airmen. "They real gentlemen. Sometimes get drunk but usually behave very nice. They have very hairy job, you know. Sometimes they come my restaurant one night and fly Vietnam next day. Some - they never come back. They grown men but to me they look just like babies." And she hurries off, her voice breaking as she scolds an overly boistcrous customer.

Takli misses the GIs too. The city is an agricultural center for the vast rice, marze and vegctable farms spread in all directions over the flat, fertile plains of central Thailand. The city. has a resilient economic base.

Foreigners have passed Takli's way for cennaries. The city prospered when the Americans came, but it was the merchants, artisans, tailors and 3,000 "goodtime guis" who flocked here from outlying areas who prospered most.

The merchants sold genuine That handicasts. and dubious antiques weathered in the hot sun or aged in a rice paddy. Tailors swiftly fried the ammen with jackets and T-shirts proclaim. ing in bold letters the buyer's loyalty to Texas

Gasping in mock agony, the victims shot up out of their chairs as the audience burst into good-natured laughter. The GIs were only playing their expected role, going along with what Thais call smuk, a word implying mischievous fun. A moment later, the sitteen joined in the laugh-

When the Gis left, so did most of the outsiders, mending the girls, many of whom married captains and corporals alike; others moved to larger cities. Most massage pariors and bars are now shuttered, their neon signs dangling.
On the two kilometer strip where the GIs linguaged off-duty, a visitor can see the faded signs. The fashionable Mustang Bar sags, empty and windhlown. The Blue Sky Chub has be come a garage. The Gav Bar, which was not a

The Passion Pit and Heavenly Massage Parlor is only a facade, its concrete interior a playground for Thai boys and girls booting a soccer ball. Furtive and darkened, the Darling Lady Massage Parlor is still in business. The few dance halls still open feature combos playing sweet and sad Thai songs and their versions of Western ballads. Several of the musicians in Takli remember when the GIs shouted for Beatles hits and frugged the night away. "Now we sound like Guy Lombardo." one of the musicians says. You know who he is?"

Winnie's is still popular, but now the cus-tomers are Thais from the town and the air base. Sometimes she points to the 20 framed awards given her by the Americans, Her favorite declares her lifetime membership as honor-ary "Gunfighter Extraordinaire" of the 366th Tactical Fignter Wing — F-105 pilots.

Often she chats with her longtime friend, the Rev. Michel Coutand, a Catholic priest from France who, for 16 years, has nurtured a one-man mission in Takli. Father Mike, as the Americans called him, speaks perfect Thai and impeccable GI. The 50-year-old priest and the 47-year-old Winnie are the joint custodians of the American memory. On a drive through Takli and its environs, Father Mike points to a number of schools, roads and temples financed and built by U.S. Civic Action teams.

The GIs are long gone but 50 of their children remain. Some are black, some blond all occasionally hear gibes regarding their ancestry. Father Mike helps with the children and cherishes them, seeing them as the inevitable legacy of foreign armies.

Life goes on in Takli. Crops are harvested in the countryside and funneled through the city. Takli residents remember the GIs with a shrug and a grin. They were mostly nice fellows and, for foreigners, had a keen sense of sanuk. by Debra Weiner ORAT, Thailand — On most afternoons, inside the windowless Veterans of Foreign Wars canteen here, nearly 20 middle-aged American men gather. The red painted floor is peeling. Pictures of jet fighters exploding in midair, a drawing of a Green Beret are tacked to the yellowing walls. The green tablecloths bear the greasy remnants of the daily American specials — meat loaf, BBQ pork oo a bun, beans and Down the lane from the Jumbo Massage Parlor, across the way from the Thai temple Wat Chaeng Nai, tucked inside the tumhle-down Seri Hotel, the sunless VFW restaurant serves these old soldiers as home, or the closest thing to it.

"Everybody's got to be somewhere," explains a thickset former officer stationed at the head of a long table. At the height of the Vietoam war, he was one of tens of thousands of U.S. soldiers based here. When, in the mid-1970s, the U.S. military installations scattered throughout Thailand were closed, he was among the several hundred Vietnam veterans who decided to stay put.

"Make no mistake about it," he stresses.
"Our loyalty first of all is to the United States. If we had to make a choice, the U.S. is our country, though, of course, that doesn't mean we don't enjoy living here." Quickly he lists the virtues of Thailand: its beauty, its people, the low cost of living. A three-bedroom house in this oortheast provincial capital rents for about 1,000 baht (roughly $43) a month. Village prices are even lower, a small house might cost only 400 haht. Too, the food is good, and the women lovely, as well as

Still, he concedes, at times it's nice to be with Americans, which is why he often comes to the canteen. Named after Karl Richter, a 24-year-old pilot who was killed in action over North Vietnam on his 198th mission, VFW Memorial Post 10217 is a place where his former comrades can go. There are four VFW posts in Thailand, with roughly 600 members. The Korat chapter has about 70 members, but is said to be the most active and is the only one with a canteen.

Unlike U.S. chapters, members of the Korat post do not march in parades, hold beauty pageants or have a band. They do, however, lay wreaths — on Thai and U.S. war veterans days. They also pay school bills for a deceased serviceman's daughter. And this year these former soldiers, most of whom wore military stripes for more than 25 years, were scheduled to sell hot dogs and hamburgers at Korat's bicentennial fair.

More often, however, the veterans are active only down at the canteen. They arrive early in the morning and stay into the night, drinking away their time. They support their Thai families (most were previously married to American womeo) oo their military pension. "Most of the people are betweeo jobs." says the retired officer. "Or," he continues, pointing his chin at the meo on either side of him, "on a back. Because they don't want us back."

"If you talk with him," warns the former officer, "remember: He speaks for himself and not the VFW."

"Here, sit down," the loud one says, pulling up an extra chair. He introduces himself as 48-year-old Fred Amsden from New Jersey, who joined the Air Force at age 17, volunteered to leave a wife and five children and go to Vietnam and who, after 22 years in the military, has lately been doing mostly oothing.

"I'll tell you why we doo't go back. Because we're all moho, that's Thai for angry or upset. We know we won't be accepted back there because of what we did. And what did we do? We joined the military, thinking we'd be doing

Amsden was trained as an electrician. One Amsden was trained as an electrician. One day, however, he read a ootice that crew members were needed for some special work. He signed up and became a tailguoner, flying secret search-and-destroy missions over Cambodia — for an extra $200 a month. "I thought I was going to be killing Commies," he says, pouring out a glass of local whiskey. "Hamper won ever looked down a machine arm pouring out a glass of local whiskey. "Hmm Have you ever looked down a machine gun and seen women and children fall? That's right, I could see who I was killing. Sure, what I did, I did on my own. I didn't have to fly. I didn't bave to pull the trigger. I did it for the money. Three times. But hell, what a way to earn money.'

He takes a long drink. "So I made a mistake. l killed a lot of the wrong people. So now I bave to live with it. All I want to do is live a peaceful life somewhere and die of consumption within two years."

No one says anything for a long while. Amsden just sits there with the glass of whiskey resting against his forehead. Finally the man sitting opposite him breaks the silence.
"You're not the only one, Fred. Most of us in here have guilty consciences."

"Or are disheartened," says a gray-haired roundish man wearing a pink shirt. "I'm Joe' Palumbo," he says and extends his hand. "I was a fireman in the Army. Twenty-five years.

J got back from Vietnam thinking I'd get a job in the States, easy, and it turns out they'd switched equipment. The only work I could

International Cervantes

The International Cervantes Festival is the largest cultural event in either the Spanishspeaking world or in the Americas. Three spring weeks of music, theatre, dance, arts. cinema and lectures are held in Guanajuato, an exquisite 18th century town four hours from Mexico City.

The programme attracts the world's greatest artists, many of whom will also appear in Mexico City itself or in other towns throughout the country; performances will also be televised. Thus the 10th International Cervantes Festival will be seen by more people than ever before. The festival is a reminder that although Mexico now attracts world attention as an oil-rich country with the most rapidly growing economy in Latin America, its cultural base is deep, widespread and rooted in Mexican history. To understand this is to understand a vital part of the Mexican mind. The festival is organised under the personal patronage of Mrs. Carmen Romano de Lopez Portillo, First Lady of Mexico.

This year's programme includes performances from: The Israel Phillsarmonic with

The National Theatre The Royal Philharmonic Orchestra with Erich Leinsdorf Mexico City Philharmonic Claudio Arrau Jean Pierre Rampal Vladimir. Ashkenazy Shlomo Mintz Gidon Kremer Marilyn Horne Rustaveli Theatre I Musici European Community Youth Orchestra

Leonard Bernstein

Ivo Pogorelich Guanajuato, Mexico

Ballet, dance and folk ensembles: Boston ballet with Nurevey; Merce Cunningham; Bejart's XX Century ballet; Mexico's Ballet Folklorico; and groups from Yugoslavia, Egypt, Japan, Thailand, Philippines and Spain.

Theatre from:

Berlin, Poland, Spain, Greece, Italy, the United States, Hungary, Nigeria, Brazil, Cuba and Argentina. Mexican players will give street performances of Cervantes's famous one-act plays.

International ballet gala:
Nntalia Makarova-Denys Ganio; Gelsey

Kirkland-Frank Augustyn; Valendna Kozlova-Leonid Kozlov; Marianna Tcherkasky-Danilo Radojevic; Maria Aradi-Sandor Nensethy.

Opera from: Argentina, and a festival production of Fidelio with the Dallas Symphony

The International Cervantes Festival, like its European counterparts, is enthusiastically popular with its own countrymen. But there is a special welcome for tourists. Among this university town's cobbled streets and squares are new hotels with ready access by air or road to the prettiest part of Mexico.

TEW YORK - It is not easy to find a moderately priced and still cen-trally located hotel in New York City today, but it's possible. A recent room-by-room scrutiny turned up some surprisingly satisfactory hotels. You won't get glamour at this price; "We sell only two things," says Tom Reiss, manager of the Century Paramount in the heart of Times Square, clean and comfortable."

Desk clerks may try to sell higher-priced rooms first, so if you want rock-bottom prices (perhaps an inside room on a low floor, maybe over the kitchen or near the center of noise) you may have to demand it in no uncertain terms. Rooms with one double bed rather than two doubles are often cheaper. And be sure to have all reservations confirmed in writing most hotels will honor a previously quoted

These prices in most cases will hold through fall. They do not include a city tax of 8% percent plus an occupancy tax based on room cost, about $2 for a $50 room. All New York City telephone numbers require area code 212.

Most of the bargains are on the West Side, many in the theater district where the architect Stanford White built hotels in the early part of the century. Times Square, still one of the great theater centers in the world, offers several botels doing business in the low-key, lowpriced, no-frills way they have been practicing for 50 years.

The Century Paramount at 235 West 46th Street (tel: 246-5500) near the Imperial and Lunt-Fontanne theaters has an international flavor, many of its guests are on tour from England, France, Germany and Italy. Some of its former style is evident in the spacious lobby, marble stairs with decorative iron railings and baroque bronze elevator doors. Billy Rose's Diamond Horseshoe nightclub began in this hotel; it is now a legitimate theater in the basement. Rooms are economy-plain with oldfashioned bathrooms and tiny closets. The price is $50 a night for two persons at the desk, but if you write and include a deposit for a

Another old hotel, the Edison, just west of Broadway on 228 West 47th Street (tel: 246-5000) has rooms recently redecorated in quiet tones of marcon and gray for $58 double. Plans to redecorate the unimposing lobby are under way. There are a small cafeteria with good plain food at low prices and a more expensive steak house, Kenny's, on the 46th Street side of the lobby.

The Carter Hotel at 250 West 43d Street (tel: 944-6000) is a large, family-style hotel oear the Port Authority Terminal that caters to tours of sports fans — it was host to 500 marathon runners in October. Rooms are simple, spotless and small. Above the 18th floor many have 1930s-style French doors opening onto cramped little balconies with great views

(not for young children). Free parking in the building is a big plus but proximity to 42d Street is oot; $40 double. In a very different mood is 44th Street from Fifth to Sixth Avenues. This is the core of the Apple, with the Morgan Guaranty Trust Com-pany, the Harvard Club, the New York Yaebi Club, the City Bar Association and the revered old Mechanics Library all huddled together against the onslaught of the 20th century.

On this block is one of the most distinguished small hotels in New York, the Royal-ton at 44 West 44th Street (tel: 730-1344). Its serene good taste would please anyone from Great Aunt Agatha to a Philadelphia lawyer. Only about 25 of its 130 rooms go for under $50 and they aren't easy to get. White designed this building; note the small circular foyer at the entrance, which is duplicated on the floors

The Mansfield Hotel down the block and closer to Fifth Avenue at 12 West 44th Street (tel: 944-6050 or 682-5140) is another White hotel, although you would never know it from the lobby, which has been altered. Rooms are clean and adequate but if you want decor this is not for you. Double rooms run $40-$44-$48; some cheaper rooms share a bath. The concierge here is especially friendly, which creates the feeling of a small European hotel.

The Gorham at 136 West 55th Street (tel: 245-1800), just off Sixth Avenne, where the corporate skyscrapers cluster, is another little gem. This one has charm, not in the lobby, which is under renovation, but in the elegant hallways sparkling with crystal-type lighting and in the comfortable rooms, each with a tiny kitchenette. This botel is popular with presidents of small firms who don't have big expense accounts; $55 double. The Taft at 777 Seventh Avenue at 51st Street (tel: 247-4000 or 800-223-9844) is just opposite the Winter Garden Theater. It has a large design

grand old-fashiooed lobby of creamy marble and bronze, somewhat austere in the style of a Spanish castle. It has 1,300 rooms, plain but neat as a pio; $50 double.

The Wellington at Seventh Avenue and 55th Street (tel: 247-3900) is as much an institution in New York as its neighbor, Carnegie Hall. Since 1905 it has accommodated armies of musicians, ballerinas and plain music lovers to small, cheerful rooms; $56 couble.

Just across from Lincoln Center the Empire Hotel at Broadway and 63d Street (tel: 265 7400) is in a class by itself. It faces a charming little square with trees and benches, and offers a fine view of the fountain and open spaces of Lincoln Center. The Empire has a lovely lobby with high ceilings, graceful staircases and a balustraded balcony, right out of a Vienness opera. Double rooms are small but suitable and all the rooms have recently been redeco-

Manhattan's East Side is almost out of moderate-priced botels. One ootable exception is the Prince George at 14 East 28th Street (tel: 532-7800 or 800-221-4972). This is a quiet allbut-forgotten corner of the city near Madisoo Square Park. It gets a lot of businessmen and their families, who love the baronial lobby and the delightful little lounge. Rooms, bowever, are quite small; $62 double.

Not, nearly so elegant but a great bargain is the Seville at 22 West 29th Street (tel: 532-4100) in the same block as the Little Church Around the Corner, famous among theater people for weddings. The old hotel, built in the style of Stanford White, has been much remodeled and modernized, ft bas spacious rooms, some with luxurious marble baths, for $49 double.

The Upper East Side has only one good low-cost botel left, the 50-year-old Pickwick Arms at 230 East 51st Street (tel: 355-0300). Its lowceilinged lobby, with an electric fire burning, suggests a small Loodon hotel. Rooms are tiny, austere and very elean, while cheaper rooms share a bath; $40 double.

Women alone might want to stay at the Alberton House at 130 East 57th Street (tel: 753-8841], one of the city's best locations. Sober, small, whistle-clean rooms cost $25 for a single with running water only (bath and toilet down the hall. A room with bath is $35 single; there are only a few double rooms with bath. for $60 each. Security is important here strangers (or men) are kept out.

At the Top of the Snooker Heap

by Elaine Davenport

ONDON - "I sometimes think, bloody hell, it's unbelievable what's happening to me," says Steve Davis, who grew up in the unpromising area of East Loodon and is oow said to be Britain's highest paid sportsmao thanks to his prowess at snooker.

Davis, 24, is world champion of professional snooker, a title that meant little — except, of course, in snooker circles — until television discovered the game, dragged it out of its smoke-filled rooms and gave it a wider audieoce. Davis' elean-cut looks have helped promote the snooker boom. "Grannies love me," he admits. And so do younger women. A froot-page newspaper picture of him stripped to the waist the day after he wen the world utle made him the sport's first pinup.

Snooker, a form of pool that is played with 15 red balls and 6 balls of other colors, is mainly played in Britain and in countries with strong British ties such as Canada and Australia. In the world championships, held in Sheffield every year - compeniion opens Thursday - finalists play up to 135 games during two weeks, and most of the games are

"I've probably been on television more than any other sportsman in England." Davis says. "Television has got hold of snooker in Britain to the extent that you become a TV personality. It's a weird thing. People come up to me and say they feel like they know me.

He enjoys the acclaim, but halks at being considered public property He says he sometimes longs to hide, but given his 6 feet 2 inches and a shock of red hair, he is hard to miss - especially in his white Porsche 928. "I know I'm more confident. And you've got to dress and look the part because the razzmatazz is expected. But I've worked very hard at snooker. And done very well." His mother, a teacher, bought him a toy snooker table when he was 2. Later, his father taught bim the rudimeots of the game and he joined the Plumstead Common Working Meo's Club near his home, where he speot hours practicing. Since age 18, he has made his base at a snooker club at

Romford in East Loddon. "Self-discipline is the one thing you need to be a sportsman," says Davis, also a keen chess player. "My father always emphasized that."

Davis turned professional in 1978 and his annual earnings are calculated at $1 million, half of which comes from promotional work and endorsements and the rest from prize mooey and exhibitions. He gets $2,500 a night for an exhibition game. "I don't have time to spend much of it," says Davis. "But I don't really need anything apart from petrol. I'm playing snooker and doing what I want. It's the only thing that really gives me a buzz and I intend to play as long as I enjoy it."

four children and a grandchild, Well-groomed and geotle, she functions from thic gray-and-white offices close to her Upper East Side clieotele, to whom she delivers the kind of elaborate party clothes they oeed.

But she is no dilettante. She has learned from Bill Blass the value of trunk shows and speods a lot of time on the road. Just back from San Francisco, she says, "You have to go around and meet the customers." Basically, she does not take berself seriously. "I am just a woman designing for another woman," she in-

Joan Burstein, owner of Brown's in London, who has been covering the American scene for the last five years and loves it here so much that she has bought a house in Easthampton, calls Ronaldus Shamask the most promising young American talent. "Because his clothes are very special," she explains, "and not for everybody. I hope he stays that way." Like Ferre, in Milan, Shamask is an architect who designs clothes that are all shape and cut with little embellishment. "I don't do ruffles,"

Burstein, who was the first in Europe to have a Calvin Klein and a Ralph Lauren boutique, says oow a third of ber business is done with American designers. Other favorities of hers include Bieff-Herrera and Fabrice (both famous for sequined evening wear); Zoran (for his simple styles); Koos van den Akker (for his patchworks of leather and fabrie). and Pinky and Diane, to whom she gave their first order. Pinky and Diane, who she week, are Americans whose original success came from a collection of finely detailed shirts made of Italian silk in Hong Kong, Now, they are into everything, including menswear.

All this and Jack Mulqueen, who says that line-for-line copying is not dead, it has just joined the star system. The flamboyant Mulqueen, also known as Fast Jack, started as a captain of pleasure ships in Florida and has oow become the self-made king of the knockoff trade. He has his picture - himself, surrounded by pretty models - all over town as well as in the fashion magazines, "One thing we believe in," he says, "is publicity."

Mulqueen buys copying rights whenever he can. When he can't, he simply helps himself, mainly from the pages of W, an offshoot of Fairchild's Women's Wear Daily, which does spectacular advances in full color. Mulqueen is so fast that be says be can have the clothes in the stores before the designers have a chance to show in Europe. The secret of his technique lies in his vertical operation, starting with yarn-spinning and ending with manulacturing

Asked if he does not feel guilty about copying, be says, "On the contrary, There are 40 million working women in this country and they cannot afford to pay ridiculous prices. I think I'm doing a public service. I'm a fashion Robin Hood." Whatever he is doing, it pays. The Yves Saint Laurent blouse that sells for $450 in a shop costs $70 when it becomes a Mulqueen copy.

The American collections will go on for another week. The two biggest hits so far have been Ellis, who has the fresbest, most exciting talent in New York, and Klein, who is slowly becoming the Saint Laurent of American fashion. During a recent visit to Paris, the usually sporty Klein went to Maxim's for the first time, as a guest of French Vogue's editor, Francine Crescent. That, be said, impressed him oo end and prompted him to do an elaborate series of sexy, satin evening sheaths.

The World's Fare: Yogurt, a Staff of Life

by Marvine Howe

NKARA - In Turkey, hospitality means yogurt. "If you heap all the rieb foods in froot of a guest and not yogurt, the guest has oot been properly received," according to one 14th-century text. And it is much the same today. For the Turks, yogurt i the all-purpose food: a rich creamy soup, a light salad, a seasoning and companion for all kinds of vegetable and meat dishes, a substitute for cheese, a dessert, a wonderfully fresh drink called ayran.

In the rural areas, many a Turkish peasant will tell you: "The way to live to be 100 years old is live oo yogurt, bread and onions." Some Turkish scholars point out that in the 16th century, a Turkish doctor saved King François I of France from a terrible disease by treating him with yoguri made from goat's milk. Its fame spread through France as the "wonder medicine." That view is still held by some Turks, Dr. Atilla Konar of the Cukuro-va University agriculture faculty announced recently that current studies show yogurt can act to reduce cholesterol, serve as an annibiotic in certain diseases and even destroy cancer cells. The ordinary Turk may not be aware of yogur's full scope as a health food, but he does know that it keeps better than milk without refrigeration. This is still important in a nation where only 8.2 percent of the families in villages, and 41.5 percent nationwide, have refrigerators.

Some doubt has been east on the parentage of yogurt. Because European scholars studied Bulgarian yogurt first and named one of its essential bacteria the Bacillus bulgaricus, Bulgarians say that yogurt is their inventioo. But according to studies by Turkish scholars, yogurt came from the Turkish nomad tribes of Central Asia about 1,000 years ago. They point out that the word "yogurt" is indigenous to the Turkish language and was mentioned in a document written by Yusuf has Hacib of Balasagun in Central Asia in 1069.

Actually yogurt is fermented milk. Many Turks still make it at home by boiling milk (to evaporate the water it contains), then adding a little yogurt as a starter and letting the mixture sit for several hours.

Some Turks remember when the "yogurt man" used to carry yogurt in clay pots on trays banging from a pole across his shoulders, like the old Chinese water carriers. The yogurt was made from sheep's milk in a large pot with a high flame from beech wood. The best yogurt came from the dairy farms around Silivri, a small town on the Sea of Marmara, about 35 miles west of Islanhul. But that was some 50 years ago, when Turkey's population was 14 million. Now there are 45 million inhabitants, all femanding yogurt. They've had to switch to cow's milk, make the yogurt industrially and sell it in plastic containers in the supermarket.

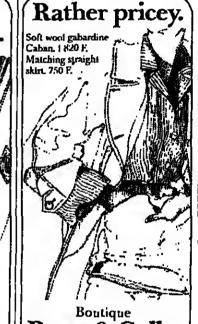

The best yogurt today is still found in villages, where people make it themselves from sheep's milk. In the Ankara area, yogurt perfectionists get their supplies from the farm built by Kemal Ataturk, where it sells 30 cents the half liter. But the lays Turkey's commercial yogurt, whether it's at a modest kebab parlor or a first-class restaurant.

The yogurt in Turkey may have been tastier in the old days, but it's still better here than in most places — it's part of the oational heritage,

Only a Bird in a Gilded Cage

by David Galloway

RNSBERG, West Germany -- Josef Voss first became interested in birdcages in 1955 when he converted part of his firm's production of household wares to the manufacture of wire birdcages. Four years later, in Utrecht he discovered a graceful model from the 17th century, bought it and thus founded a collection that opened to the public in 1965 as the world's only museum

There are now more than 300 rare examples in the Arnsberg museum, Deutsches Vogelbau-ermuseum, complemented by engravings and lithographs, a reference library and extensive documentation of the birdcage as a motif in painting. Since anuquity, many hird-fanciers have preferred no-frills, low-cost housing in willow or reed, but architectural whimsy has also spun palaces in glass, raised rosewood cathedrals, cast lattice-work porcelain domes ornamented with gold filigree.

In addition to floor models, to cages that stand, lean, hang or revolve, there are traveling models to suit the most imperial taste. The glory of the Arnsberg collection is a two-story mahogany cabiner fitted with 30 cages, each with a pair of polished-crystal bowls and enamel plaque. Built in the 16th century and inlaid with delicately banded marquetry, it is a tri-umph of the French cabinetmaker's art.

For slightly less-privileged travelers there is three-story replica of the Hotel Pupp in Karlshad, complete with towers and terraces and lofty galleries for afternoon promenades. The caging of hirds, not merely to be fattened for a feast but to please the eye and ear. has an ancient history, but first became a widespread fashion in the late 16th century. Formerly, the Spanish carefully controlled the export of melodic "sugar birds" from the Canary Islands, excluding females from the export trade and extorting princely prices for the males. Only the most fortunate hostess could receive her guests with such a living iearly receive her guests with such a living jewel perched on her forefinger.

Female canaries had clearly been smuggled aboard a schooner that went aground on Elha in 1650, for the escaping birds rapidly multiplied in the island's mild climate. The offspring of those castaways provided the stock with which the Italians began the first systematic breeding. One section of the Arnsberg mu-seum documents these early batcheries, which became a major cottage industry in Europe. Parakeeis, parrots and cockatoos were also cherished drawing-room ornaments, and such exotic travelers clearly required sumptuous quarters. Not only architects and designers were pressed into service; in 1711 the first of "The Visitor" (c.1905), also oil on board, again uses this high-window viewpoint and portrays in quiet gentle colors the quiet courtyard of a country house. The visitor of the title is opening one of the tall gates in the yard wall, and is about to enter. It is very conceivably a portrait of the artist himself, an unimposing overcoated figure, visiting a friend, and typically arriving by the kitchen door rather than making a grand entrance at the front of the house.

The third, "Andreville: Reading Beneath the Trees" is another harmonious, gentle portrayal of a quiet moment, exactly the theme that best Ao etching of 1877 called "Le Retour des Artistes aux Champs-Elysées" is a sweeping view of the avenue with silhouettes serving to mark out the perspective, not unlike Eugène Gallien-Laloue's Parisian street views. But the silhouettes are very sketchy and there is a lightness of touch about the perspective that is very far from Gallien-Laloue. In fact, one is almost reminded of some of Jongkind's pencil sketches. The price of 4,872 francs (about $780) greeted the superb impression of 1877 offered at the Drouot sale.

Saved From the Blight of Obscurity

In some rare cases, Buhot went to the extreme of academic-stylc illustrative drawings. But then he would make up for it by his inventiveness in composition. In "L'Hiver à Paris," an etching done two years later, the main view covers a large rectangular area tucked into one big corner with a frieze of small-size illustra-tion in a vertical band at the left and more illustrations in a horizontal frieze at the top. The effect achieved is brilliam and the two impressions offered in succession each went up to

But Buhot could also be as good as any Impressionist. A dry-point, "L'Orage," comes as close to Impressionist landscape as any other despite its source of inspiration — a Constable painting. The light and shadow effect conveyed through parallel strokes is particularly striking. It soared to 4,640 frames — a large

A more frequent mood with Buhot was the subdued sunset-style romanticism associated with the Barhizon school. "Les Bergères, Soleil Couchant" combining etching and dry-point, done in 1881, is in that mood — with Turner-like quality to the handling of some surfaces diluted in light. At 4,505 francs - the price reflecting the public's feeling of admiration -

it is a lot for a little-known artist. Interestingly, most of Buhot's drawings were not much more expensive. A small drawing in crayon beightened with white, "Les Boulevards à Paris" was a superb buy at 3,712 francs — this anticipates some of Bonnard's early drawings. It cost only 1,740 francs to get a delightful study in crayon of donkeys on a country lane, harking back to the 18th century with its feel for cute animals. The reason for the low pricing lies precisely in Buhot's versarility - he practiced many styles and, although be was no imitator, he always reminds you of: someone. Commercially nothing is worse than an artist whose manner cannot be character-

The only relatively high prices were paid for the bigger drawings with a coloristic effect. An admirable view of a harbor in pen, sepia wash and white that could have been done by Jongand white that count have been uone by Jong-kind in the 1870s went up to 7,515 francs—a third of what the 9,5-by-14-centimeter sketch would be worth if by Jongkind—and a bril-liant study of sailing boats; at sea equaling Jongkind's best was expensive for an unknown artist's drawing at 5,220 francs, although highly desirable as a work of art.

Cheapest of all in relative terms were the paintings. If Buhot means anything at all to most comoisseurs, it is as an engraver, not as a painter. A view of the moonlit bay at Disard was sold for 21,455 francs, another view in the same series for 6,960 francs. Here the style is entirely original, ironically enough, but the artist's production in this line is very limited and a few paintings by a little-known master most familiar for his etchings will never be worth an awful lot of money however good they may be

by Max Wykes-Joyce

ONDON — "Everything about him is unobtrusive, secretive," wrote Raymond Escholier in his "French Painting; XXth Century" about the intimist painter Edouard Vuillard. The truth of this observation is most clearly to be seen in a small but fine exhibition of Vuillard's work at JPL Fine Arts, 24 Davies Street, W.1 to

In the show are four works that may be termed archetypal Vuillards. "The Lawn" is an oil painting, done about 1900, of a circular patch of turf into which three small circular flower beds have been cut, a composition of a great variety of tones of green, and seen from high above, a lard himself — peinture à la colle — a term for which there is no exact English equivalent. Meaning literally "painting with glue," the method consists of mixing a proportion of pasle with pigment, which gives a much more tractable medium, capable of being used as thinly as water-mother in 1906. It is a quintessential Vuillard, in which lamplight falling on people, furniture and tableware makes a rich and cozy pattern of comfortable living.

Other paintings à la colle in the exhibition are "A Country Road," a large vertical landscape panel sparsely painted in fall colors against a hazy sky, and an equally large work. The Illusionist," which portrays the wings of a variety theater with entertainers waiting their turn to go

Several other works emphasize Vuillard's interest in and involvement several other works emphasize Vuillard's interest in and involvement with the theater, which began in 1893/4, the first season of Lugné-Poë's Théâtre de l'Oeuvre, Vuillard doing the decor for the initial production, Ibsen's "Rosmerholm," and following it a year later with the decor for the same playwright's "The Master Builder." On show are two small pastels from this period, "The Theater Box" and "Black Pierrot": a watercolor design for the program of Lugné-Poë's rival, Le Théâtre Libre; and a much later (1931) study for "A Midsummer Night's Dream"

Escholicr, writing in 1937, was also of the opinion that Vuillard was the last great portrait painter [in France]." In this exhibition, certainly, even the sketches and studies by which his portraintre is represented show this greatness. These display an extraordinary consistency over more than 30 years, from the oil sketch of a little girl in profile, "An-nette" (c. 1906), and the oil sketch on board of "Suzanne Depre" (c. 1920) to the enchanting pastel of "Irene" (c. 1927) and the preliminary drawing for the "Portrait of Mme. Weil" (c. 1938).

In his portraiture, as in his landscapes, his interiors and his theatrical pieces, Vuillard concentrated the whole of his force and energy into the matter in hand. He realized how intense was this concentration, for in a letter to his friend, the painter Maurice Denis, he wrote: "Whatever I have the good fortune to be working at, I am working at because I have complete faith in the idea which impelled me to begin the work. As for the end result, I don't trouble myself about that at all."

where a sister Socialist government apparently has promised to lend Greece the Venus de Milo. "She traveled to Japan. I'm sure she'd like to see Greece, and Greeks who can't afford to travel to Paris want to see her," Mercouri says. Greece, she continues, has no claim for return of the Venus or the Winged Victory of Samothrace, the two glories of the Louvre's collection of Greek antiquities.

Mercouri's mission, as she conceives it, is to enliven Greek culture for Greeks — including archaeology. "You dig anywhere in Greece, and likely as not you'll find a miracle," she says, adding: "But archaeology is in conflict with our people." Inadequate compensation for treasures reported to the authorities and long delays while officials hold up construc-tion at ancient sites are two abuses she wants

Bringing home, even temporarily, outstanding pieces of Greece's heritage is part of her drive to enliven Greek culture for Greeks. "It's the main, perhaps the only permanent, thing we have in this country," she says. She is also determined to decentralize cultural facilities. "The provincial libraries are horrid, dark and cold places with a few damp books," she says. She is confident her hudget will be doubled: "I've been raising money since the resistance, so I'm not going to stop now."

The resistance was political opposition to the junta of colonels who ruled Greece from 1967 to 1975. Mercouri was in exile, often in the United States, using her stardom to crin-cize the Athens regime. Most of her fellow ministers were caught in Greece and tortured. Mercouri's documentary film about them was banned from Greece's stateabout them was banned from Greece's staterun television by the rightist government.

"After being blacklisted for so much of my recent life, I can't get over being in the light," she says, glancing at the sky outside her top-floor office. Chauffeured to work in an official limousine, she still drives her own open-topped jeep to visit constituents in Piracus, where she remains a symbol of generosity and concern. She tries to infuse the same spirit into the Min-istry of Culture, a sprawling bureaucracy that she complains "has no backbone." The mini-try was created by the colonels: "They wanted a watchdog ministry, so they could be sure nothing would happen."

Her aim is the opposite: "I can say things that other ministers can't because culture covers so many issues." Already, she has received invitations to visit 18 countries, and she will go to Mexico in June for the first international conference of culture ministers. #### Argentine Finance Company in Liquidation

BUENOS AIRES — Argentina's biggest finance company has been put into liquidation, the Argentine central bank announced Friday.

The bank said that the existing deposits of the company, Rio Parana Compania Financiera, would be guaranteed as would any new deposits that might be made.

Rio Parana had deposits of 1,125 billion pesos ($112 million) on December 31, nearly twice as much as its nearest rival, Azopardo. The central bank intervened in Rio Parana's operations last Friday because of irregularities in the company's administration that occurred before Argentina's military occupation of the Falkland Islands. Sources said there had been a run on Rio Parana's deposits since the intervention.

Major Swiss Banks Set Up Gold Brokerage

ZURICH — The three Zurich gold pool banks — Union Bank of Switzerland, Swiss Bank Corp. and Credit Suisse — announced Friday they will set up a precious metals brokerage company.

Establishment of the Premex brokerage house is intended to expand precious metals trading in Switzerland and strengthen the position of the Zurich and road.

Zurich gold pool, a joint communiqué said.

Premex will serve as an intermediary for transactions in professional trading and will begin operations in the next few months, it said. It will not do any transactions on its own account.

Ashland Blames Loss on 'Near Chaos'

ASHLAND, Ky. — Ashland Oil said Friday its $11.6-million loss for the second quarter, which ended March 31, resulted from "near chaotic conditions" in the crude oil and petroleum product markets.

It said U.S. petroleum product prices declined during the quarter at a faster rate than crude oil prices. It said its coal operation recorded a second quarter loss because of high inventories and cold weather. Ashland said it expects improvement in the financial results for its petroleum division in the fiscal third quarter.

Broken Hill Scraps Ahminum Smelter Plan

MELBOURNE — The proposed 550-million-Australian-dollar ($580-million) aluminum smelter project at Lovhinvar, New South Wales, will be scrapped, Broken Hill Proprietary amounced Friday.

It said it had found it impossible to reorganize an acceptable joint-

Comparing Economies OECD Makes Apples Equal Oranges

New York Times Service showing that the United States had the highest living standards among 15 industrial countries in 1980 takes a fresh approach to the problem of comparing econ-omies with different currencies and price structures.

For the study, released earlier this month, the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development used a method that adjusts economic activity in individual countries by using an index known as "purchasingpower parities." The index is based on the actual cost in each country of a representative group of 1,300 goods.

The new method compares what per-capita gross domestic product can actually buy in each country — for example, how adjusts economic activity in in-country — for example, how many pairs of shoes and how many color television sets. "This provides us with more meaningful comparisons be-tween countries, said Peter Hill, head of the 24-nation organization's statistics division. "This represents a quantum leap forward from the use of ex-change rates to make compari-

In the past, most efforts to compare economies relied on merely expressing the GDPs of various countries in terms of one currency. That method is less accurate, according to the Parisbased OECD, because currency-exchange rates do not perfectly reflect the costs of living in a country. For instance, if the Jap-anese yen falls 10 percent against the U.S. dollar, that does not mean the Japanese can buy 10 percent less than befure. Foreign-exchange rates reflect currency traders' expectations of how much demand there will be for each currency in the future, not just what each currency can

U.S. Consumer Prices Show Biggest Decline Since 1953

WASHINGTON — U.S. consumer prices fell 0.3 percent in March, the first decline since 1965 and the largest since 1953, the government reported Friday.

At an annual rate, the March decline works out to 3.3 percent, the Labor Department said. For 1982's first three months, prices rose at an annual rate of 1 percent, the smallest quarterly increase since 1965, after rising at a rate of 5.4 percent in last year's final

The sizable decline was unexpected; analysts generally predicted a slight rise, on the order of the increases of 0.3 percent in January and 0.2 percent in February.

The White House immediately took credit for the progress on consumer-price inflation, which was 13.3 percent in 1979, 12.4 per-cent in 1980 and 8.9 percent last

Larry Speakes, the deputy press secretary, said the reduction is due to "an economic policy that has cut the rate of spending, our support of a stable monetary policy and our policy of conintervention in the marketplace."

White House spokesman up to now have not emphasized President Reagan's support of the Federal Reserve's tight money policy - a policy that many economists say is largely to blame for high interest rates and a severe recession. One of the leading analysts of price data, Donald Ratajczak of Georgia State University, agreed that the report is a sign the president's anti-inflation policy is working. "Give the administration credit," Mr. Ratajczak said. "We'll scream at them when the unemployment figures come out." The unemployment rate for March was 9 percent, equal to the post-World War II high.

The Georgia State economist said the fall in the consumer price index probably would be only a "one-month phenomenon." He "one-month phenomenon." He predicted that prices will rise at an annual rate of 5 percent in the second half of the year.

At a meeting of the congressional Joint Economic Committee Friday, the president's top economic adviser. Murray Weidenbaum, predicted that consumer prices will rise 6 percent or less this year, low-er than the previous official Reagan administration forecast of 3 percent.

"Inflation, the cruelest tax of all, is coming under control," Mr. Weidenbaum said.

The seasonally adjusted March price decline was led by a 1-per-cent drop in the cost of transportation; gasoline prices fell 4 percent were down 8.7 percent from a year before. Food and housing costs each dropped 0.3 percent, while interest rates on mortgages Medical care and miscellaneous prices, however, rose I percent in the month. Entertainment costs climbed 0.5 percent and clothing

The recession was not the chief cause of the overall price decline, Mr. Ratajczak of Georgia State said. "Gasoline is the big item," he said, followed by the decline in mortgage interest rates. He said the third most influential factor was a drop in home prices, which could be ascribed to the recession. March's decline was the biggest since a 0.4-percent fall in November, 1953, the department said. Since then, prices have fallen as nine selling days in mid-April.

The No. I U.S. automaker, General Motors, said that sales rose much as 0.3 percent in a mooth only twice, both times in 1954. 15.5 percent over year-ago levels but that year-to-date sales were off On an unadjusted basis, the consumer price index stood at 283.4 Ford, the second-largest car-maker, said mid-April sales rose 1.7 percent from the same period a percent of the 1967 level, up 6.8

percent in both February and March, marking the first time since 1976 that those costs have declined two months in a row.

For recipients of Social Security benefits, the latest price figures mean a cost-of-living increase of 7.4 percent July 1, the government said. The increase is based oo the 12-month change in the consumer price index.

The automatic Social Security rise, less than last year's 11.2 percent, will raise the average monthly payment for a retired worker to about $406 from $379.

U.K. Prices Up 0.9% for March

LONDON — Retail prices in Britain rose 0.9 percent in March, a 10.4-percent annual rate and the lowest level since May, 1979, when Margaret Thatcher became prime Government figures released Friday were in line with her forecast Thursday that inflation would fall to below 10 percent before the end of the year. The annual rate in February, 1982, was 11 percent. The fifth decline in retail prices in the past six months brought the inflation rate to less than half the peak level of 21.9 percent in May, 1980. When the Thatcher government took office, the annual rate was 10.3 percent.

International Executive Opportunities

International Financial Group - Geneva

ur client, Dar Al Maal Al Islami, is a diversified financial business operating in strict accordance with Islamic principles. Following expansion over a number of years the company is now poised to commence the next stage of diversification into main stream banking activities.

A Management Services Manager is required in Geneva to assume direct line responsibility for all management services and data processing activities for the group. These activities will be conducted through subsidiaries throughout Europe, the Middle East and the Far East. This will involve the development of an information systems strategy for each major area of activity, and the formulation of co-ordinated data pro-

The successful candidate, probably aged 35 to 45, will be a true professional with at least 7 years experience of controlling a management services function, including data processing, preferably in a banking or financial environment. It is essential that applicants have had specific responsibility for systems evaluation and development, and the operation and maintenance of major online systems. English is the working language of the organisation and a knowledge of Arabic and French would be advantageous.

An attractive compensation package is offered including assistance with relocation to Geneva. Whilst the ability to meet the demanding job specification is of prime importance the position may be of particular interest to candidates of Muslim origin.

Candidates should write in confidence for a job description and application form quoting HT/8201 to:

BYZANTTUM ENDURES

By Michael Moorcock. 373 pp. $12.95. Random House, 201 East 50th St., New York 10022.

Reviewed by Paul West

WHEN you open "Byzantium Endures," a bulge forms down the middle of the two-page frontispiece nap, all the way from St. Petersburg in the north to Constantinople in the south. A handy fluke, because it's along the time-line of this vertical bulge that Micbael Moorcock's anti-hero whizzes up and down, from Kiev in the dead center of the map to Odessa, due south, then up to St. Petershurg, after which he goes to Constantinople, which is old Byzantum. Like mercury in a fine tube, he measures the revolutionary climate in the first decades of our century; a twisted H.M. Stanley looking for the source of Russia's pain.

But be's more than that: self-engrossed and self-serving, he is an ac-complished liar and an anti-Semitic Jew whose emotional life is a series of agonized twists. Determined not to be agonized twists. Determined not to be what life has made him, Maxim Arturovitch Pyatmitski only becomes more so: for supposedly hygienic reasons his father had him circumcised, and this obsesses "Pyat." In fact, he is nothing hut obsession, although some of the things that haunt him are more interesting than remembrance of a interesting than remembrance of a prepuce past: his love of aeronautics, for instance, comes bewitchingly through. As a mere boy, he devised a manned flying machine and, partly to impress Esme, his childhood sweet-heart, jumped into the Bahi Yar ravine, thus attaining premature fame as the learns of Kiev.

Usual Traps

If you believe him, that is. A firstperson narrative, "Byzantium Endures" has all the usual traps: no corroboration by witnesses, no interventions by an all-knowing authority whose mind is the novel's locus. Moorcock supplies an introduction which explains how Pyat's papers came into his hands, eventually to obrame into its hands, eventually to obsess "him" and drive him "half-mad."

There is even a "a facsimile page from Pyat's manuscript" to thicken up the illusion, and Moorcock makes a tempting joh of the preview, offering the image of old Pyat in London, his lined extent timpling in favorite pulse. final retreat, tippling in favorite pubs with his mysterious mistress, a Mrs. Cornelius, who wafts through the book proper like some Cockney angel of mercy, rescuing him from trigger-happy Bolsheviks and spiriting him across the Black Sea in a double cahin aboard the "Rio Cruz."

A game of mirrors is going on here, a game whose rules extend beyond the a game whose rules extend beyond the immediate concerns of "Byzantium Endures." As Moorcock says, Pyat "knew that I had already ... exploited [Mrs. Cornelius] in some books," and there are the several Jerry Cornelius novels to prove it, as well as "The Adventures of Una Persson and Catherine Cornelius in the Twentieth Century," And, if you jump ahead to the last page of Moorcock's recent fantasy covel, "The War Hound and the World's Pain" (Timescape, $12.95) you find a note saying that he "is working on an ambitious four-vol-ume novel "Some Reminiscences of Mrs. Cornelius Between the Wars." the first volume of which, "Byzantium Endures," has already appeared."

Hence some of the buffing and puffing in the introduction, which is essentially a portait of the artist as an inheritor of materials. He resists the opportunistie Pyat's demand that he write the life of Mrs. Cornelius but, eventually succumbing to Pyat's spell, ploughs through 11 shoeboxes of papers and ends up with the present text (1900 to 1920) whereas the papers go all the way to 1940, with Pyat in a concentration camp. The reader has to work out whether or not, granted the constraint of editing, the entire novel should have been cast in the mode of the preface, with Pyat given-not raw and unmediated, but planted in the living tissue of authorial speculation. I wonder, because Moorcock as himself, or impersonating himself, is a subtler teller than Moorcock impersonating Pyat, who limps and drones and fumbles, enlarging what an expert novelist would have trimmed, and vice versa. If the gain is a greater realism, the loss is in technique; a loss which perhaps the other three volumes will justify.

As it is, some of the book foams along. The disastrous parabola of Pyat's cocaine-heightened private life is undeniably vivid, and it survives the logiams of data allowed in by the pu-tative editor. An odd mix of picaro, Cartesian diver, and thwarted pilot who flies all the time in his mind's eye. Pyat is someone to remember: convinced he never had the life he deserved; a fake, a snob, a lover of ma-chinery ("the sight of a simple English bicycle" ravishes him), and a misfit who says to Winston Churchill "How are you, you old bugger?" He runs errands for wealthy women and watches the world go to hell while he acquires a special engineering diploma, dallies with homosexuals, invents a death-ray that fails, and ponders "A Thousand Books That Bored the World."

Rasputin stalks through these pages while Pyat lurches from high to high in white suit, boater, walking with his in white suit, boater, walking with his silver-headed cane into and out of aliases, leaving only the "liquid steel" of his sperm behind him. He struts along the rim of history and topples off, a man who might have ruled the world (or so he thinks), an H.G. Wells figment who ends up in real Wells-land, living over a second-hand clothes shop in Notting Hill, surrounded by bits of old bicycle "petrol engines, old spark plugs, electrical bric-a-brac." A new New Machiavelli in a white golfing hat, he has in his day been flogged ing hat, he has in his day been flogged by a commissar, crashed into the ocean in an obsolete scaplane, and remembered always that Odessa was uamed for Odysseus. Something gritty and nasty about him keeps him at a slight distance, at exactly the distance where personification thrives; so he easily becomes what he thinks himself the spirit of the age, an Ancient Mariner who's read Nietzsche.

A memorable though greasy cre-A memorable though greasy creation, he puzzles me only if I try to figure out when he wrote things down. The hlurb says "told... during the Russian Revolution," but it all feels as it set down much later, in the later is the control of the same o 30s, perhaps. It will be uncanny to have him presented by yet another first-person narrator: Mrs. Cornelius, to be sure.

Paul West's most recent novel is "The Very Rich Hours of Count von Stauf-fenberg, " He wrote this review for The Washington Post.

Cousineau Seems Headed to Browns

HOUSTON — The Buffalo Bills have apparently beaten the Hous-ton Oilers in the fight to acquire the services of free agent linebacker Tom Cousinean, and they reportedly want to trade him to the Cleveland Browns.

The Bills late Thursday offered Los Angeles

the former Canadian Football League player a five-year contract worth $2 million, but then agreed to trade Cousineau to the Browns for a No. 1 draft choice in 1983 and other lesser draft choices, sources said. The Oilers had offered Cousineau a five-year con-tract for $1.5 million.

The Bills, who own the rights to the free agent even though he went to the Montreal Alouettes after Buffalo drafted him in 1979, have until Monday to make a decision.

A Penn Relay Victory for Old Times' Sake

PHILADELPHIA - Robbie Perkins, who won his first Penn Relay race as a high school runior 10 years ago, returned to Franklin Field Thursday night and won the Olympic Development 10,000-meter run at the 88th annual Penn Relays.

Title Defended

Greg Fredericks, a member of the 1980 U.S. Olympic team and a two-time Penn Relays champion as a Penn State runner, took the Olympic Development 5,000-meter run in 13:46.3.

In college distance runs, Keith Brantly of Florida successfully de-fended his title in the 10,000-meter run by outkicking Arkansas' Pat Vaughn to win in 28:31.1, and Jeff Adkins of Penn State sprinted past Princeton's Dave Olds on the final straightsway to take the 5,000 in ATLANTA - Bruce Berenyi al second on a walk to Chris Chambliss, moved to third on a wild pitch and scored on a groundout by Bruce Benedict.

The Braves, who left nine runners on base, had two other scoring opportunities. They failed to score in the fourth after Murphy and Chambliss led off with singles. They also loaded the bases with one out in the seventh before reliever Tom Hume ended the threat by getting Gleon Hubbard on a flyout to short right field and Claudell Washington to bounce out. Hume earned his third save.

Brett Butler singled with two out in the minth but Hubbard flied out to right to end the game. The crowd of 20,701 gave the Braves a standing ovation after Hubbard's ball was caught

The Braves were quietly philo-sophical when it was over. "There was no real emotion shown," said Joe Torre, the Braves manager. "We weren't as excited as the pre-vious 13 games. I think everyone figured we'd just have to start it up again tomorrow."

Brewers 7, Blue Jays 0

In the American League, at Milwaukee, Cecil Cooper and Ben Oglivie hit home runs to support the four-hit pitching of Mike Caldwell as the Brewers routed Toronto, 7-0. Caldwell's complete game was the first for the Milwankee pitching staff this sea-son. The veteran left-hander improved his record to 1-1, walking one and striking out none.

Tigers 3, Yankees 1

In New York, Chet Lemon hit a two-run homer in the third inning and Jack Morris (3-1) pitched a six-hitter to give Detroit its sixth consecutive triumph, a 3-1 victory over New York. Lemon hit his first homer of the season - a titanic shot into the upper deck in left field - after Lou Whitaker reached base on an error by third baseman Graig Nettles. Tommy John recorded his third loss in as many decisions.

Indians 4, Rangers 3

In Arlington, Texas, Joe Char-boneau's hit a two-run double in a three-run third inning and Len Barker and Dan Spillner combined on a five-hitter as Cleveland edged Texas, 4-3. Barker (2-1) gave up just two hits and an unearned run before being chased in the seventh.

Mariners 8, Twins 4

In Scattle, Jim Essian had two hits and two RBIs, and Richie Zisk doubled in two runs in a seven-run third iming as Scattle beat Minne-sota, 8.4. Mike Moore, a mode. got his first major-league victory as the Mariners won their third game

Mistaking Ambushes for Upsets-A Problem With the NBA Playoffs

By Dave Anderson New York Times Service

NEW YORK - As the New Jersey Nets' starting team was about to leave the bench Toesday night for the opening tap in the mini-series playoff against the Washing-ton Bullets, Coach Larry Brown stared at Buck Williams, the rookie forward.

"Lenny," the coach said, "you tap the ball to Buck." "I'm Lenny." said Len Elmore. the center, pointing to himself and grinning. "He's Buck." "I'm all right." Brown said,

All the other Nets were laughing, too. But it would be their only laugh during a 96-83 loss. Now the Nets had win Friday night in Lan-dover, Md., thereby forcing a decisive third game Sunday at home or disband unoi next season.

In a National Basketball Association mini-series, the lifespan is short Too short

Value of Playoffs

If the NBA playoffs are worth qualifying for, then they're worth more than an opening two-of-three series. Of the 12 teams in the playoffs, the four division champions are awarded byes into the four-of-seven conference semifinals. The eight other playoff teams are confronted with the mirage of

In the 24 previous two-of-three opening series, which began in 1975, eight teams lost the first game at home. Of those eight, only the 1977 Golden State Warriors were able to salvage the series. In last year's mini-series, three of the four teams with better wonlost records during the season were defeated in their home opener and were sooo eliminated: the Los Angeles Lakers, the Portland Trail Blazers and the New York Knicks. Only the Philadelphia 76ers sur-

The longer the series, the more likely it is that the better team will win; the shorter the series, the more chance of an upset.

If an upset is to occur, it should be earned in a series of more than three games. In a mini-series, it's not really an upset so much as it is an ambush. Win the first game on the road, and the other team usually doesn't have enough time to re-

New Threat From Makers Of Race Cars

From Agency Dispatches
PARIS — Several leading auto constructors threatened Friday to pull out of motor racing altogether as practice began for the troubled San Marino Grand Prix in Imola.

Representatives from Renault, Ferrari, Alfa Romeo, BMW, Toleman, Osella and Porsche met in Imola Thursday night and issued a statement, received here Friday, saying that they would withdraw from the sport if the use of turbo-chargers was to be restricted. They were responding to proposed rule changes by the president of the International Auto Sports Federation, Jean-Marie Balestre, which motor racing sources said would effectively eliminate any benefits gained by fitting a turbo-charged engine in a Formula One car.

Io Imola, meanwhile, only 14 cars ran an untimed practice session Friday, with the majority of the British teams carrying out their threat to boycott Sunday's race.
The only British-based teams on Osella and Arrows failed to show, depriving the race of Niki Lauda, Jacques Laffite, Riccardo Patrese, Rosberg and Piquet, winner of this race for the past two years.

Ferrari, Alfa Romeo, and Renault joined the three British teams. Although race organizers had expected Melaren and Arrows to compete, they did not show for practice.

The British teams were protesting a federation ruling this week that outlawed the use of water three-of-five or, preferably, reduce the number of playoff teams from 12 to eight. With only eight teams, no byes would be needed. The four leading teams to each conference would be paired according to their won-lost records on a 1-4 and 2-3 basis in four-of-seven opening so ries. If an upset occurs then, so be it. An upset is the lifeblood of all playoffs. But let it be an upset, not an ambush.

Fans Aren't Fooled

If only eight teams qualified this year under that format, the Nets would have opened against the Boston Celoics. The way it is now, the mini-series cheapens the validity of the NBA playoffs. The mini-series also cheapens their attraction. For the opener of their first playoff series at Byrne Meadowlands Arena after those lonely years in Piscataway, the Nets drew only 14,015 spectators. During the season they had 18 larger crowds there, including a high of 19,367 for the Celtics, the team the Nets will play in the next round if they get by the Bullets in the mini-se When the Knicks lost to the Chicago Bulls, 90-80, in their miniseries opener at Madison Square Garden last year, the attendance was only 14,822, also far from a sellout.

Apparently the pro basketball fans in the New York area view a mini-series for what it is - a deceptive extension of the season until the real playoffs begin, meaning the four-of-seven series.

loundated by playoffs in every sport, the discerning fan isn't fooled, especially in a struggling economy. The discerning fan will save the price of a playoff ticket until his team has made it through the mirage of the mini-series into the real playoffs.

International Herald Tribune

ONDON — The writer
George Mikes was planning to collaborate on a humorous book about psychoanalysis and his co-author suggested that he submit first to a bit of analysis to know what it is like, The psychoanalyst settled Mikes on the couch and asked whether he had had a happy childhood. "I am still having a happy childhood." Mikes replied. And, at 70, be still is. He is well aware that humorists are often depressive and that as a professional displaced person be should at the very least be inclined to morosity. But he is in-corrigibly cheery. "I am a happy man and I cannot help it," he writes in a recently dashed-off autobiography, "How To Be Seventy." "Every morning when I wake up, I am full of beans, happy to be alive and looking forward to the day. Several girlfriends have left me in disgust because of this "

Mikes has lived almost all his life in London and has written more than 30 books in English. He has a fine tailor, has been to Buckingham Palace, belongs to two clubs, is whimsical about his cats, co-wrote a book on snobbery with the Duke of Bedford, and frequently contributed to the satirical TV program "That Was the Week That Was." Yet be is always referred to as a Hungarian writer, which bothers him not at all. He wears his foreignness like a flower in his lanel.

No Identity Problem

"I am not a Hungarian be cause I have lived here for 44 years. I am not an Englishman pecause I was born in Siklós. I am neither here nor there, which is fine. I have no problem with identity. Why do people take of-fense at being pigeonholed and still try to fit themselves into a pigeonhole by seeking an identifriend asked Mikes wby he didn't do as everyone else and live "But I already do live abroad." Mikes replied. If he is not an Englishman, neither is he entirely a European.

Mikes is pink-cheeked and full of glint. As be tucks into a deliciously unpronounceable dish at the Gay Hussar — a Hungarian restaurant filled with English estahlishment types and run by a Yorkshireman — he is as unflap-pable as an Englishman, but a lot cheerier. It is never easy, he says, to tell when the English are worried about a crisis: "It is impossible for the naked eye to tell their panic from their ecstasy."

The English Hungarian colony is one of the largest in the world (there are at least five Hungarian clubs in London, none of which will speak to the other) and certainly the most brilliant. It includes top British economists (Lords Balogh and Kaldor), Britain's leading restaurant critic. Egon Ronay, the publisher Andre Deutsch (who of course puhlishes Mikes), and the heavy thinker Arthur Koestler who, claims Mikes, told a gushing woman fan, "Liking a writer and then meeting the writer is like liking goose liver and then meeting
